- Few men among the great authorities in the modern science of medicine are looked up to with greater respect than Claude Bernard (the President de l'Académie de Médecine), and it is with dismay that invalids and members of the Society for the Prevention of Cinelty to Animals will read the remarks with which he has this year prefaced his annual course of lectures. Mr. Buckle assures us that with the exception of mathematics and astronomy every science is still in its infancy; and now Protessor Claude Berpard brings the weight of his high authority to support the same theory as regards medi cal science. In 1847 be said to the assembled students:—"Gentlemen, the science of medicine which I am commissioned to teach you does not exist." This year he repeats the same assertion, qualitying it with the hope that the data since obtained may serve as a foundation for an experimental science. But un ortunately vivisection is the real basis of experimental physiology. On this subject Claude Bernard expatiates with a complacency which reminds one of Peter the Great, who, wishing while at Stockholm to see the wheel in action, quietly effered one or his suite as the patient to be broken on it. The sacrifice of superfluous cats and dogs the pro'ersor reems to consider a saintary and by no means inhuman process; even in the case of superspruated horses he doubts whether they suffer more, and is certain that they suffer a shorter time, under the operator's knife than under the cabby's whip. Still this ardent votary of science is accessible to feelings of humanity. The cutting up of a live monkey was too much for even his hardened nerves. The poor brute acted so much like a human being, seizing his hands and uttering piteous cries, that he never attempted to repeat the experiment. And he admits that chloroform may be employed to mitigate the agony of the dumb martyrs to science. We may hope, therefore, that the infliction of pain on the brute creation may be mitigated at least. Perhaps the law will enforce the means for so doing which the great apostle of vivisection himself admits to be available.

-Although Scotland, as every one has heard, is more pious than any other portion of the United Kingdom, there is one circumstance constantly brought to light by the Registrar-General's reports which is seldom commented upon by Scotch divines. These authorities often boast of the superior intelligence of their countrymen and women, but they never explain the cause of an awkward proportion between the number of legitimate and illegitimate births in their part of the country. Last year, for instance, 115,673 children were born, and of these 11,266 were illegitimate. In the northeastern division the young women who became mothers without being wives were in the proportion of 15.2 per cent. At Kirkendbright it was 17.3 per cent. And yet at Kirkcudbright all pious forms and ceremonies (save marriage) are rigidly observed, and a man dare not even brush his hat on Sundays. The improving influence of the Scotch example of national chasacter is, unfortunately, diminished by the irregular increase of their population. Have the writers and divines who reprove immorality in the darker parts of these islands nothing to say about the little failings of the "unco' gude?"
